

Features:

Navigation system at the top and the bottom to help navigate through the different content in the website. And also having the articles clickable using JavaScript so the visitor of the website can go directly to the article from the main page without having to go to the sub page anymore. Adding a new hovering animation for the navigation bars at the top and the bottom to make it more alive and interactive.

Evaluation:

Changing all the borders radii to make the edges of the head, containers of articles and footer smoother and more easy on the eye for the reader. And moving the content container like the container of UK articles and WORLD articles to the top before the actual articles so the reader/visitor of the website know immediately what they reading instead of having to scroll down a bit to know so. Only making the bottom radii of the footer rounded and not the top to indicated that that is the closer/end of the page as a base of the page. Choosing the compination of background-color = #F1F1F7 and color: #1D1D1F as they are much easier to read when implemented together and appear easier on the eye instead of black and white. Fixing a maximum-width: 1080px for the body so the content does not expand over than it supposed to be and mess the aesthetic of the images and content that is aligned together. Then setting margin: auto to have the whole body in the middle of the browser no matter what size.

Responsiveness and Testing:

Used bootstrap/css to make the webpages more fixable and responsive. Setting all the div sizes to mid so it can be working on both small and large screens without having much issues with the appearance of the webpage. It interact when the window is minimized or maximized and contain its aesthetic still. It can be minimized up to 310px without affecting any of the content.

Tested it mainly on the web browser firefox as it is the best when using bootstrap as recommended from one of the module instructors.
